CONEXIONES QUE INSPIRAN

"To address risks, we need to transform ourselves into resilient companies.
¿How? Developing agile management, empowering our teams, making quick decisions with accelerated learning cycles, and developing new technologies".

This they told us

"See risks also as an opportunity: carry out a process of identification, analysis, evaluation, monitoring and communication with the objective of minimizing impacts".

We must continue to consolidate a common agenda not only in Colombia but also in Latin America. The world needs more collaborative actions and less individual ones to make progress on what is urgent: climate change, closing deep social gaps in order to be viable as a society and as a species

We are at the limit of the point of no return in the most relevant issue that summons us as humanity: climate change.

We have experienced 1.2 C of global warming since the pre-industrial period.
Even 1.5 C of warming is dangerous.
Under current trends, scientists estimate the probability of limiting the temperature to 2 C at 5%.

"The world has changed. This is one of the biggest risks for companies, not understanding those changes. There is a crisis of confidence in the future. It is the risk of thinking that the future is bad. However, the positive aspects must be seen, and the status quo must be set aside, even though it has benefited us"

Challenges and opportunities

"We will be able to live well only if we understand that the strategy must be changed. The way of thinking, of devising, of dialoguing, of acting in the new world".

Risk Management and Opportunities Panel in ISA and its companies, a business management perspective.

More technology, more innovation, more digitalization, more staff training, resilience, and motivation in the electricity sector.
